

EU Company law upgraded: Rules on digital solutions and efficient cross-border operations

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

Introduction

The Commission work programme for 2017¹ announced an initiative on company law to facilitate the use of digital technologies throughout a company's lifecycle and cross-border mergers and divisions. This consultation seeks views on the scope and content of such an initiative.

The results of previous consultations² have shown strong support among stakeholders for promoting the use of digital tools in company law and for addressing the issue of cross-border operations of companies.³ The 2015 Conference on Company Law in the Digital Age⁴ confirmed this.

All the main groups of stakeholders have, in particular, made strong calls for EU action on cross-border conversions, including in the 2009 and 2012 European Parliament Resolutions. Conflict-of-law rules already exist in civil and commercial law for contract, tort and delict, and insolvency, but an important gap remains for the law applicable to companies. The European Council has also identified this gap. Already in the Stockholm programme of 2009 it identified company law as an area where the process of harmonising conflict-of-law rules at EU level should continue.

The aim of this public consultation is to collect input from stakeholders on problems in company law, gather what evidence they have of such problems and hear their possible solutions on how to address the problems at EU level. The consultation is divided into four parts:

- Part 1: The reasons to act
- Part 2: The use of online tools throughout the companies' lifecycle
- Part 3: The cross-border mobility of companies (mergers, divisions, conversions)
- Part 4: The conflict-of-law rules for companies

More detailed explanations about each part precede the questions. In addition, the inception impact assessment explaining in more detail the context, problems and objectives can be found on http://ec.europa.eu/smart-regulation/roadmaps/index_en.htm.

Please click on one or more responses (in case of the multiple choice questions). In addition, we encourage you to explain your views or provide additional information or explanations in the free text boxes. You may also provide additional information or views by uploading a separate document at the end of the questionnaire in Section 5. The responses will be taken into account when preparing the 2017 initiative on company law.

If you have any specific questions or feedback on this questionnaire, please write to just-company-law@ec.europa.eu.

Target Groups:

- industry and business, including all types of companies or entrepreneurs from all sectors;
- representative associations at EU and national level (for example, representing the interests of the business community, consumers, trade unions and the legal profession);
- investors and their associations;
- public authorities, including national business registers and judiciary;
- individuals (e.g. consumers); and
- research and academia.

Specific Privacy Statement:

Received contributions will be published on the Internet. It is important to read the specific privacy statement attached to this consultation for information on how your personal data and contribution will be dealt with.

Disclaimer:

This document is a Commission services working document for consultation and does not in any way prejudice the Commission's decisions on the scope and content of the future initiative.

1. Reasons to Act

The new company law initiative would aim to make the best use of digital solutions in companies' interactions with public authorities but also with companies' shareholders, and to provide efficient rules for cross-border mobility of companies which could include mergers, divisions, conversions and uniform conflict-of-law rules for companies. The questions below seek your views on the problems, their seriousness and the need for EU action. A number of problems faced by companies and stakeholders have already been identified in previous public consultations and studies on company law. We now ask that you bring to our attention any recent developments on problems already identified and other problematic areas. Please also provide evidence or examples of any problems that exist and indicate how serious they are. More detailed explanations on what is meant by digitalisation and cross-border mobility rules are provided in sections 2 and 3.

A recent Study on the Law Applicable to Companies⁵ found that in many Member States there is considerable legal uncertainty surrounding the law applicable to companies. The main finding is that differences between Member States' conflict-of-law rules lead to significant practical obstacles to corporate mobility in Europe. This limits the possibility of companies of making effective use of the freedom of establishment. In a context where the substantive laws of the Member States have not been fully harmonised, uniform conflict-of-law rules could give companies and Member States' authorities more legal certainty, promote cross-border mobility in the EU and remove obstacles for them stemming from the potential for conflicts of laws. Any such uniform rules could build on the existing case-law of the Court of Justice of the EU in the area of freedom of establishment promoting choice of law. More detailed explanations are provided in section 4.

Please comment:

We strongly support the European Commission to take action in the field of digitalisation of Company Law (please refer to our comments below). This should be a step by step approach. On line registration remains key to overcome bureaucracy and accordingly boost economy. Online board meetings should be on voluntary basis as a starting point to avoid imposing any additional costs to business.

Regarding potential rules for cross-border divisions and conversions in the European Union, the European Commission should draw on the experience acquired on the application of Directive 2005/56/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 26 October 2005 on cross-border mergers of limited liability companies (Cross-border mergers Directive). According to the feedback received, the system put in practice by the Cross-border mergers Directive is working properly with good results for cross-border mobility in the European Union. Any new initiatives should build on what is already achieved and address any possible missing points. The accountancy profession is committed to continue to play its role in field, namely as independent experts, as foreseen in Article 8 of the Directive.

Regarding the conflict-of-laws for companies, we support an approach that takes into consideration the ECJ case law in this area, promoting legal certainty and a level playing field among Member States. In any case, this is an issue that the Commission needs to look upon and discuss further with Member States.

2. The use of digital processes or tools throughout the companies' lifecycle

The use of digital processes or tools for interaction between companies and Member States

There exists only a limited EU legal framework to allow the use of digital processes or tools in company law and no obligation as such on the online registration of companies⁶. For example, at national level, several Member States already allow full online registration of companies, whereas the EU legal framework allowing it cross-border does not exist. This means that in those Member States founders/representatives can register a new limited liability company in the business register in a fully online process, without having to be physically present before an authority for the act of registration or beforehand. In a number of other Member States, fully online registration is still not available and is, in any event, often difficult in cross-border situations. Moreover, not all information or documents from business registers provided electronically are considered authentic, because they do not have the same value as paper documents. Therefore, electronic versions are often not recognised and accepted in the same way as paper copies of documents. In addition, the information is often not easily accessible. The situation is very similar when registering a branch in another Member State and filing or publishing information.

We seek your views as to whether current company law rules need to be modernised to ensure that everyone involved in the lifecycle of a company could benefit from digital technologies. We would also like to know which safeguards would be needed to ensure that digital procedures are secure and do not lead to fraud.

6. i.e registration of an entity in the business register

2.1 What are the main issues that could be addressed for the use of digital processes or tools by companies in their interaction with national business registers? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Make it possible to register, file and publish information on companies and branches fully online in a short time
- b. Provide for appropriate safeguards to make the online registration, filing and publication trustworthy
- c. Provide structured online templates and forms, in particular for the registration of companies and their instruments of constitution
- d. Ensure the recognition of documents/information issued by business registers, including the acceptability of electronic copies which should be accepted as 'true copies'
- e. Ensure that companies do not have to provide the same information more than once nationally and, where possible, cross-border
- f. Other issues
- g. No need for EU measures in this area
- h. No opinion

Please comment:

We fully support the use of digital processes or tools for interaction between companies and Member States for reasons of simplicity and efficiency and as a way to foster economic activity in the internal market by removing any undue barriers to companies willing to operate cross-borders.

As some Member States are already advanced in the use of these digital tools it would be important to introduce EU minimum requirements to achieve some level of consistency across Europe.

As part of the suggested safeguards, we would like to draw attention on the following:

1) Modernisation of company law and anti-money laundering/ countering the financing of terrorism (AML/CTF) measures should go hand in hand. It provides an opportunity to introduce additional safeguards to ensure that the information in beneficial ownership registers and business registers is accurate. Unfortunately, some registers rely currently on self-reporting and do not verify the information that is provided to them by businesses. Such verification is important in the context of anti-money laundering efforts.

2) It is important to ensure that the same level of security can be provided online as in the physical world. This was highlighted by the recent ransomware attack Petya. In Ukraine, the malware appeared to be introduced in several cases via tax preparation software that is used to file taxes. This shows that the use of digital processes to interact with the authorities can be used by malicious actors to launch cyberattacks.

2.1.1 What kind of safeguards would be needed? (please choose all that apply)

- Harmonised safeguards to verify the identity (including recognition of electronic IDs, application of the eIDAS Regulation and possible video-conferences)
- Possibility for an exceptional face-to-face verification of identity in case there is a genuine suspicion of fraud
- Harmonised safeguards for the electronic verification of the legality of information or documents (for example, pre-defined structured templates)
- Other safeguards
- No opinion

Please comment:

The use of eIDs and the eIDAS Regulation can provide useful safeguards for identity verification. The Commission recognized this in its proposal for the revision of the 4th Anti-Money Laundering Directive. We support the Commission's approach.

However, there are many additional techniques that can help business registers with identity verification. FinTech can be a helpful source of inspiration in this regard. As stated in the European Commission Consumer Financial Services Action Plan (March 2017); One of the main benefits of FinTech in the short run is its potential for facilitating on-line relations with customers. Business registers can thus draw lessons from this sector. In addition to applying basic identity identification and verification measures such as checking names against electoral roles there are other solutions. For example, additional validation of an ID picture can be obtained by asking the person to send a photo of himself and then compare both pictures. Moreover, it is possible to analyse online behaviour. For example, checking whether a customer's email address was created in a high-risk jurisdiction or has been reported as associated with fraud. Further examples can be found here: https://www.fintrail.co.uk/s/FFE-CDD-Paper_03052017.pdf.

Use of online tools for interaction between companies and shareholders

Digital tools (such as e-mail, messaging applications, audio and video conferencing software, digital information exchange platforms, electronic signature, blockchain voting facilities) could make the interaction between companies (listed and non-listed) and their shareholders significantly easier. Such tools could reduce costs and improve the efficiency of voting and the exercise of other shareholder rights, in particular in a cross-border context. However, it appears that the use of digital tools is not always allowed. Limitations may exist in some Member States for certain situations and different types of companies. In addition, Member States' different rules and lack of standardisation may also create barriers to the effective use of digital tools in company law.

2.2 In which areas could companies (listed and non-listed) be encouraged to use digital tools when interacting with their shareholders? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Communication between companies and shareholders on general meetings
- b. Participation and voting in general meetings
- c. Communication outside the general meetings (for example, relating to payments of dividends, issuance of new shares or takeover bids)
- d. Adoption of shareholder resolutions without a physical meeting
- e. Other areas
- f. No need for EU measures in this area
- e. No opinion

Please comment:

Initiatives in this area have to take into consideration the recent publication of Directive (EU) 2017/828 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 17 May 2017 amending Directive 2007/36/EC as regards the encouragement of long-term shareholder engagement (The Shareholders rights Directive).

Additional measures facilitating further online voting would be welcomed in the future. In turn, such possibilities can enable shareholders to play more active role in the life of the company.

3. Cross-border mobility of companies (mergers, divisions, conversions)

The EU company law already provides a framework for cross-border mergers of limited liability companies (Directive 2005/56/EC), but there are currently no harmonised EU rules for cross-border conversions and divisions.

Cross-border mergers

The introduction of harmonised rules on cross-border mergers (Directive 2005/56/EC) made it possible to carry out cross-border mergers and resulted in a substantial increase in cross-border merger activity. At the same time, according to a recent study on the application of this Directive⁷, there are still some problems with its practical implementation and functioning in practice.

For example, the current rules specify that creditors should be protected according to national rules. However, research shows that the diversity of national safeguards leads to practical difficulties. In the 2014 consultation, 80% of respondents were in favour of harmonising the rules on creditors' rights. This included a preference for granting guarantees/securities to creditors⁸ and for having the creditor protection period start before the cross-border merger becomes effective ('ex-ante')⁹.

Minority shareholders can also be affected by a cross-border merger. The current EU framework lays down minimum rules and gives Member States the possibility to provide additional protection to minority shareholders under national rules. However, Member States' rules on minority protection vary across the EU. The 2014 consultation showed that 65% of respondents supported harmonisation of minority shareholders' rights. This included a preference for allowing minority shareholders to request compensation and for harmonising the starting date of the protection period¹⁰.

7. http://ec.europa.eu/justice/civil/files/131007_study-cross-border-merger-directive_en.pdf

8. 83% of respondents who were in favour of harmonisation supported providing creditors with a right to request a company to provide a guarantee or security; 54% were in favour of asking the court to require the company to provide such a guarantee or security.

9. 86% of respondents were in favour of harmonising the date determining the beginning of the protection period and 75% of those supported an "ex ante" starting date.

10. 70% of respondents in favour of harmonisation supported providing minority shareholders with a right to request compensation. 75% of respondents were in favour of harmonising the date of the beginning of the protection period.

3.1 What are the main issues that could be addressed with respect to cross-border mergers? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Provide cross-border safeguards for creditors
- b. Provide for specific cross-border safeguards for public authorities (other than for creditors)
- c. Provide for cross-border safeguards for minority shareholders
- d. Further facilitate a cross-border merger procedure (e.g. provide possibility to waive the management report)
- e. Other measures
- f. No need for further EU measures in this area
- g. No opinion

Please comment:

According to the feedback received, the system put in practice by the Cross-border mergers Directive is working properly with good results for cross-border mobility in the European Union. Any new initiatives should build on what is already achieved and address any possible missing points.

Cross-border divisions

Current EU company law sets out a procedure for public limited liability companies to divide at national level (domestic divisions). There is currently no EU procedure to directly divide any limited liability company on a cross-border basis, and only some Member States provide for such rules at national level. Therefore, companies wishing to divide cross-border have to perform several operations (for instance, a national division and a cross-border merger), which involve costly additional procedures.

Due to the fact that many Member States do not have rules on cross-border divisions or when they do, those rules differ, the position of stakeholders (in particular employees, creditors or minority shareholders) is unclear and their interests might not be effectively protected. Also it is not always clear for public authorities, including business registers, tax authorities or social security institutions, how to treat such operations.

3.2 What are the main issues that could be addressed for cross-border divisions? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Set out a cross-border division procedure (leaving the question of safeguards for stakeholders to Member States)
- b. Set out a cross-border division procedure and provide for uniform safeguards for stakeholders across all Member States
- c. Set out a procedure with minimum safeguards for stakeholders (Member States could enact or maintain more protective rules)
- d. No need for EU measures in this area
- e. Other measures
- f. No opinion

Please comment:

Regarding potential rules for cross-border divisions and conversions in the European Union, the European Commission should draw on the experience acquired on the application of the Cross-border Mergers Directive.

Cross-border conversions

There is currently no EU procedure for the direct cross-border conversion of a company, i.e. for companies to move at least their registered office¹¹ to another Member State. Only some Member States provide for such rules at national level. Also, where such rules exist, the conditions under which such a cross-border conversion can be carried out (e.g. whether the companies need to transfer only their registered offices or also their "real seat") differ¹². In practice, in most cases, companies need to wind up in one Member State and dissolve all their contracts, and a new company has to be set up in another Member State. Alternatively, companies can convert and transfer their registered office indirectly — by becoming a European Company (SE)¹³ or by creating a subsidiary abroad and merging with it via EU cross-border merger rules. Both cases involve additional procedures and costs which deter the vast majority of companies from using them. Due to the fact that many Member States do not have rules on cross-border conversions or when they do, those rules differ, the position and rights of stakeholders (in particular employees, creditors or minority shareholders) are often unclear in case of a cross-border conversion. Also it is not always clear for public authorities, including business registers, tax authorities or social security institutions, how to treat such operations.

11. The registered office refers to the address of a company as registered in the business register. It establishes an important link between a company and the legal order of the country in which it was formed and registered.

12. Member States apply their own laws with regard to the establishment of companies on their territory. Many Member States only require a registered office. Other Member States require more, for instance a "real seat" – i.e. central administration, headquarters or principal place of business – in their territory as a condition for establishment.

13. A specific European legal form of Societas Europea, SE, for which transfers are allowed in EU law.

3.3 What are the main issues that could be addressed for cross-border conversions? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Set out only a cross-border conversion procedure (leaving the question of safeguards for different stakeholders and the question of seat of companies to Member States)
- b. Set out a cross-border conversion procedure and provide for uniform safeguards for different stakeholders across all Member States (leaving the question of seat of companies to Member States)
- c. Set out a cross-border conversion procedure with minimum safeguards for different stakeholders (Member States could enact or maintain more protective rules, but leaving the question of seat of companies to Member States)
- d. Cover the question of stakeholders' protection through conflict-of-law rules in cases of cross-border conversions (see also Question 4.7)
- e. Set out a cross-border conversion procedure which lays down specific rules to deal with the seat of companies
- f. No need for EU measures in this area
- g. Other measures
- h. No opinion

Please comment:

Regarding potential rules for cross-border divisions and conversions in the European Union, the European Commission should draw on the experience acquired on the application of the Cross-border Mergers Directive.

4. Conflict-of-law rules for companies

Many companies have operations in several Member States. Sometimes they are incorporated in one Member State but set up main operations in other Member States. This is an expression of the freedom of establishment guaranteed in the Treaty on the Functioning of the EU. With an ever more integrated single market, this trend is likely to continue. Despite this cross-border phenomenon, at present, conflict-of-law rules in the area of company law are regulated exclusively by Member States. Thus the content of these rules may differ substantially.

There have been various practical obstacles reported from the countries that have retained an aspect of the real seat theory, for instance problems in identifying the place of the real seat. The case-law of the European Court of Justice has not yet led to a convergence of national conflict-of-law rules applicable to companies. Companies may encounter problems and difficulties such as problems with the boundary between the applicable law and other fields of law, possible application of two or more Member States' company laws or may even be faced with the impossibility to carry-out cross-border conversions

4.1 What problems arise when national conflict-of-law rules for companies differ? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Problems with identifying the place of the "real seat" or the place of incorporation of a company
- b. Problems related to the divergent or conflicting provisions in different national company laws
- c. Cross-border conversions are made virtually impossible
- d. Problems with the boundary between the applicable company law and other fields of law (for instance insolvency, tort, contract law)
- e. Problems with the application of overriding mandatory rules of domestic law that may interfere with foreign company law
- f. Other
- g. None
- h. No opinion

Please comment:

As an overall comment regarding conflict-of-law rules, the respective ECJ case law should be taken into consideration especially when it comes to respecting freedom of establishment. In light of this, there is a need to promote legal certainty and ensure level playing field among EU Member States.

Connecting Factor

The connecting factor determines which national substantive company law applies. For the connecting factor, traditionally, some Member States follow the real seat theory, i.e. the law governing a company is determined by the place where the central administration of that company is located. Other Member States follow the incorporation theory, i.e. the law governing a company is determined by the place of its incorporation.

The case-law of the Court of Justice of the EU has considered that certain practices in Member States imposing their company law rules on companies incorporated in other Member States on the basis of the real seat approach are an unjustified restriction to the freedom of establishment. Against that background, today in all Member States, the place of incorporation is used de facto as the sole or the main connecting factor to determine the applicable law (lex societatis) in intra-EU cases. A significant number of companies have made use of the resulting corporate mobility and choice of law.

The law of the place of incorporation is not applied without exceptions. The laws of all Member States provide that certain provisions of their substantive company law apply to companies that are incorporated under the law of another jurisdiction (so-called "overriding mandatory provisions", i.e. provisions which are crucial to safeguard a country's public interest, such as its political, social or economic organisation). This indicates a country's strong desire to retain an appropriate degree of control over foreign companies operating within its territory when public interests are at stake. While this broad consensus should be taken into account in the context of a possible future harmonisation, the jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice, which sets limits to the application of overriding mandatory provisions in order to give effect to the principle of freedom of establishment, must be observed at the same time.

4.2 By which law should a company be governed?

- a. By the law of the country where the company was incorporated or has its registered office, subject to overriding mandatory provisions and public policy exceptions
- b. By the law of the country where the company has its real seat, subject to overriding mandatory provisions and public policy exceptions. Please specify in the free-text box below which elements for the determination of the 'real seat' you have in mind, e.g. central administration, main operations.
- c. Other (please specify in the free-text box below)
- d. I don't know

Matters governed by the lex societatis

Most existing conflict-of-law rules for companies provide for a non-exhaustive enumeration of matters which are governed by the lex societatis (i.e. the law governing a company). Also a possible EU instrument could contain such a non-exhaustive enumeration of matters governed by the lex societatis. These matters could include both the internal aspects of the company (in particular the rights and obligations among the members of the company, its functioning and organisation, or the directors' liability towards the members of the company and the company itself) and the external aspects of the company (i.e. the existence of the company as a legal entity, its general capacity and the separation between the members' and the company's property). The governance of all these matters by the same law could ensure consistency and predictability.

Certain matters do not only address the internal affairs of the company. They reflect wider policy goals and choices, as these rules seek to balance the interests of different social players within the society where a company operates. This may for instance concern rules on employee participation. Two options could be considered: the first option would be to exclude such rules from the scope of an EU instrument and leave such matters to the national conflict-of-law rules. The second option would be to include such rules in the scope of the instrument. This would be based on the consideration that Member States can protect such social policy goals, also in relation to companies governed by a foreign lex societatis, by relying on overriding mandatory provisions.

Matters which are not of a company law nature will be in any case excluded from the scope of an EU instrument on conflict-of-law rules on company law. These matters include revenue, customs and administrative matters; insolvency; contractual and non-contractual obligations, rights in rem, trusts and labour law.

4.3 What matters could the lex societatis cover? (please choose all that apply)

- a. Internal matters
- b. External matters
- c. No opinion

4.3.2 Please specify which external matters should be covered by the lex societatis:

- The existence of the company as a legal entity
- The general capacity of the company
- The separation between the members' and the company's property
- Other external matters (please specify in the free-text box below)

Please comment:

4.4 Could certain matters be excluded from the scope of a uniform conflict-of-law instrument reflecting wider policy goals and choices?

- a. Yes
- b. No
- c. No opinion

Universal or intra-EU application

Conflict-of-law rules usually have universal application. For instance, when determining the law applicable to contracts or torts, it is irrelevant whether the law of a Member State or a non-Member State is designated as applicable. Therefore, one option is to provide for universal application also of a future instrument on company law. There are, however, also EU conflict-of-law rules without universal application, for example, in insolvency proceedings.

Including companies established under the law of a non-EU country in the scope of a future instrument on the law applicable to companies could have far-reaching implications, for instance, for the protection of shareholders, other stakeholders and society at large. Therefore, taking into account such specificities of company law, excluding companies incorporated in third countries from the scope of a future EU instrument could also be considered. A more limited scope of application of this kind would correspond to the scope and impact of the current case-law of the Court of Justice which, in the absence of EU conflict-of-law rules, is based on the freedom of establishment and therefore addresses only intra-EU cases.

4.5 Could EU-level conflict-of-law rules for company law have universal application, i.e. should they also apply to companies incorporated in non-EU countries with operations in the EU?

Change of applicable law

In accordance with the case-law of the European Court of Justice, the possibility for a company established in one Member State to convert to a company governed by the national law of another Member State, i.e. to change the applicable law while keeping its legal personality, without prior winding-up or liquidation, is guaranteed by the freedom of establishment in certain circumstances. Specifically, a Member State which enables companies established under its national law to convert, cannot exclude or unduly inhibit, in a general manner, companies initially governed by the law of another Member State from converting to companies governed by its own national law and thus exercising mobility. However, the company that wishes to change its applicable law must satisfy the requirements applicable to national companies for incorporation in the new host Member State (e.g. registration, effective residence requirements, minimum capital, disclosure, internal structure or number of members). The Court has clarified that in this regard the principles of equivalence and effectiveness apply.

The old home Member State's law could continue to govern the rules on the protection of minority shareholders and creditors of the company.

However, not all Member States' laws explicitly allow the cross-border relocation of the statutory seat of companies or have rules on its effects on the applicable law.

4.6 Should a possible future instrument on conflict-of-laws in cross-border operations of companies specifically address the possibility of a change of the applicable law through a cross-border conversion to another Member State without loss of legal personality?

Please comment further:

Accountancy Europe welcomes modernisation of company law especially when looking into aspects of digitalisation. Nevertheless, introducing tools to facilitate cross-border mobility and online initiatives should not lead to lose focus on further EU coordination of substantive Company Law.
