

Does your innovation contribute to a more sustainable future?

Maximise its benefits for your business

Intellectual property (IP) is an integral part of transforming to a more sustainable future and driving commercial success

 Increasingly conscious of climate change and resources, society strives for a sustainable future.

 The life cycle of products and services is being valued, including yours.

 IP supports the green transition to a more sustainable future.

 Today's economy extends beyond profit-making. It also seeks to deliver environmental and social value.

 A sustainable business community is rising, with European innovative industries leading the way in green technologies and products.

 IP protects your contribution to innovation and sustainability, allowing your business to reach its full potential.

The European Union Intellectual Property Office (EUIPO)'s report Green EU trade marks shows that SMEs play a vital role in introducing eco-friendly goods and services to the EU market. SMEs file more green EU trade marks than large companies. This emphasises their importance in the EU economy and green transformation.*

* The EUIPO report Green EU trade marks <https://www.euipo.europa.eu/en/publications/green-eu-trade-marks-2023-update>. The report defines green EU trade marks as applications that contain at least one 'green' term in their goods and services descriptions. Green terms are expressions related to the protection of the environment and to sustainable development.

Does your innovation contribute to a more sustainable future?

8 reasons why IP registration can help your business achieve its goals

Boost your financing options

Public funding and investors' interest in sustainable portfolios aimed at long-term returns is growing.
